"Current and Future Prospects of Plasma Based Application
A Personal Perspective"

Abstract: In the year the Institute for Plasma Research started activities on developing Plasma-based applications relevant to India and commercially viable in surface engineering, material processing and waste destruction. The unified waste pyrolysis technology was developed with innovative inputs and spun off successfully. The versatility of non-equilibrium plasmas to drive chemical reactions with the ability to operate in ambient pressure by positive ionization & thermal ionization allowed it to expand its application potential. This resulted in developing applications like the treatment of sewage sludge for recyclability and plasma-treated water is germicidal and agricultural applications. Emerging applications relevant to India include CO₂ sequestration for Carbon-neutral India, Helium recovering for hydrogen production and Sustainable and in-situ Arsenic production for Agriculture. There are developing areas where new ideas in venturing.
